Like A Child

"...you have hidden these things from the wise and the learned (and) you have revealed them to little ones."
Matthew 11:25

The "wise and the learned" carry knowledge within them that children do not have. Knowledge is essential, but it can also keep the mind blocked from receiving what the spirit needs for growth. Too much emphasis on knowledge leads to imbalanced self-importance and an unwillingness to listen and learn from others. No wonder Jesus refers to children as the ones who discover the hidden things of the heart. I've observed children with their parents in supermarkets. The parent is intent on one thing only—securing what's on the shopping list. In the meantime, the child reaches out to touch colors on packages, picks up fruit and smells it, pokes around longingly in the candy rack. In our faith life, we might consider being more like a child in a supermarket, exploring and examining what we believe. Greater maturity is always available in order to fully live the tenets of our beautiful Christianity.
